

About the Artist

Abhijeet Shrivastava is an award-winning climate change artist, designer, and sustainability visionary whose evocative charcoal drawings bring environmental stories to life. Born in central India, Abhijeet discovered a passion early on for the expressive power of charcoal, an ancient, natural medium that continues to define his artistic voice. Today, he harnesses this sustainable material not only for its raw beauty but also as a statement against the carbon-intensive practices of contemporary artmaking.

Working at the intersection of art, climate action, and design, Abhijeet creates climate-neutral artworks using eco-conscious materials such as biochar to raise awareness of environmental issues. Each hand-drawn piece serves as both visual meditation and a call to action, revealing the inseparable connection between aesthetics and ecological responsibility. His practice reclaims traditional techniques to deliver deeply contemporary messages: reverence for nature, urgency for change, and hope for a regenerative future.

Abhijeet's work has been featured in solo exhibitions, international publications, and recognized by institutions including the White House. His ability to blend visual serenity with environmental urgency has earned him a growing global audience.

He holds a master's degree in architecture and urban design from Columbia University, grounding his creative and strategic work in systems thinking and urban climate resilience. Alongside his artistic practice, Abhijeet supports the sustainable growth of AI and data center infrastructure, integrating environmental performance to ensure that technological innovation aligns with long-term climate goals. He advises public and private sector clients on designing resilient, future-ready strategies.

Through every facet of his work, Abhijeet invites audiences to reimagine the role of art in building a more sustainable and equitable world.
